Andrea Pompilio makes pattern clashing look oh so right. The Italian-born menswear designer is greatly influenced by his grandfathers, hence the threads of fine tailoring and military-themed detailing throughout his collections.

Pompilio's Spring/Summer 2017 collection featured an abundance of stripes, collared shirts and bomber jackets, giving each look a cool, vintage flare. Most of the polos were cut with a deep V-neck without the option of buttons. The high-waisted, baggy trousers and shorts were crafted of denim or striped patterns and completed with self-tie belts. Each look, topped with a varsity-like bomber jacket or blazer, took us back to high school in the 70s, but in ways that can be rocked even in this decade. Outfits were detailed with bandanas tied around the neck and loafers or high-top sneakers. Other highlights included graphic sweatshirts with different phrases on the front, including a few that said "Who the f*** is Andrea Pompilio?" We have a feeling that soon enough, everyone will know the answer to that question
